Together We Rise Book Study: Why You Can't Teach United State History without American Indians

November 19th – 6:00 p.m. – 7:30 p.m.

This book, which has been deemed "An absolutely essential book" is a wonderful compilation of Indigenous history that reveals powerful truths that put you in the center of Indigenous history and not just a peripheral view of it. It is well known that history is written by the winners and winners are able to determine the narrative that becomes what we accept as history; this undermines the contributions of those who "lost" and were marginalized in the process. Why you Can't Teach* United States History without American Indians is a collection of well-researched essays on misconceptions of Indigenous history that helps the readers understand why we need to re-examine the histories we were taught.

Wellness Wednesday

November 4th
6:00 – 7:00 pm EST

Register here!

Wellness shouldn't be another thing on your to-do list. This Wellness Wednesday is designed for educators who are tired of being told to "just take care of yourself" when the real problem is that there simply aren't enough hours, energy, or boundaries in the day. Join us as we focus on small, practical changes that fit into the life you're already living.

Teaching for Black Lives Book Study – Session 1

November 18th 6:00 p.m. – 8:00 p.m.

Throughout this book, we will demonstrate how teachers connect curriculum to young people's lives and root their concerns and daily experiences in what is taught and how classrooms are organized. We also highlight the hope and beauty of student activism and collective action.
